Promotion and attrition

This section shows key figures related to differences in between male and female workers on how their career evolves at Trealco.

Percentage of women attrition: 50% (percentage of women employees that left the company, of the total employees that left the company)

Percentage of women total promotions: 40% (percentage of women that received a promotion, of the total number of employees that received a promotion)

Pay

The gross yearly pay in this section refers to the sum of the following components:

- Base salary (gross, before taxes)
- Net allowances, meal and eco vouchers as well as any other benefits in cash
- Bonuses, their gross value (before taxes)
- Mobility budgets and company cars
- Other benefits in kind such as health insurance, life insurance

The gross hourly pay of an employee used for comparison is calculated by dividing the employee's gross yearly pay by the average hours worked per year.

The percentage pay gap is then calculated in accordance with the VSME ESRS [1].

Note: bike allowances, phones and laptops are not considered as this would complicate the calculation and the same policies apply for all employees.

Company average gender pay gap: -10%

This percentage indicates the difference in average gross hourly pay, in between women and men – a negative number means women on average have higher pay than men. This is mainly due to a relative higher number of women in experienced and senior consulting positions.

Conclusions

The calculations indicate no negative bias towards gender in Trealco's current hiring and promotion practices.

The average gender pay gap is –10%, meaning on average female colleagues at Trevalco have a higher hourly pay. Which is due to a higher number of women in more senior consulting positions. We consider this a positive situation.

It must be noted that since we are not a very large company – fewer than 30 permanent employees – numbers are expected to fluctuate a lot over the years and conclusions cannot be drawn on minor statistical differences.
